About this idea

The elf has set up a full cookie "factory" on the kitchen counter — an assembly line of Oreos carefully twisted apart, the cream scraped out, and each one neatly re-filled with white toothpaste, then pressed back together perfectly. A rubber glove is draped over the elf's hand, a butter knife sits beside a tube of toothpaste, and the finished "cookies" are stacked back on a plate as if nothing happened. Pure deadpan chaos waiting to be discovered.

What you'll need

- Oreos
- Toothpaste tube
- Butter knife
- Rubber glove
- Plate

How to set it up

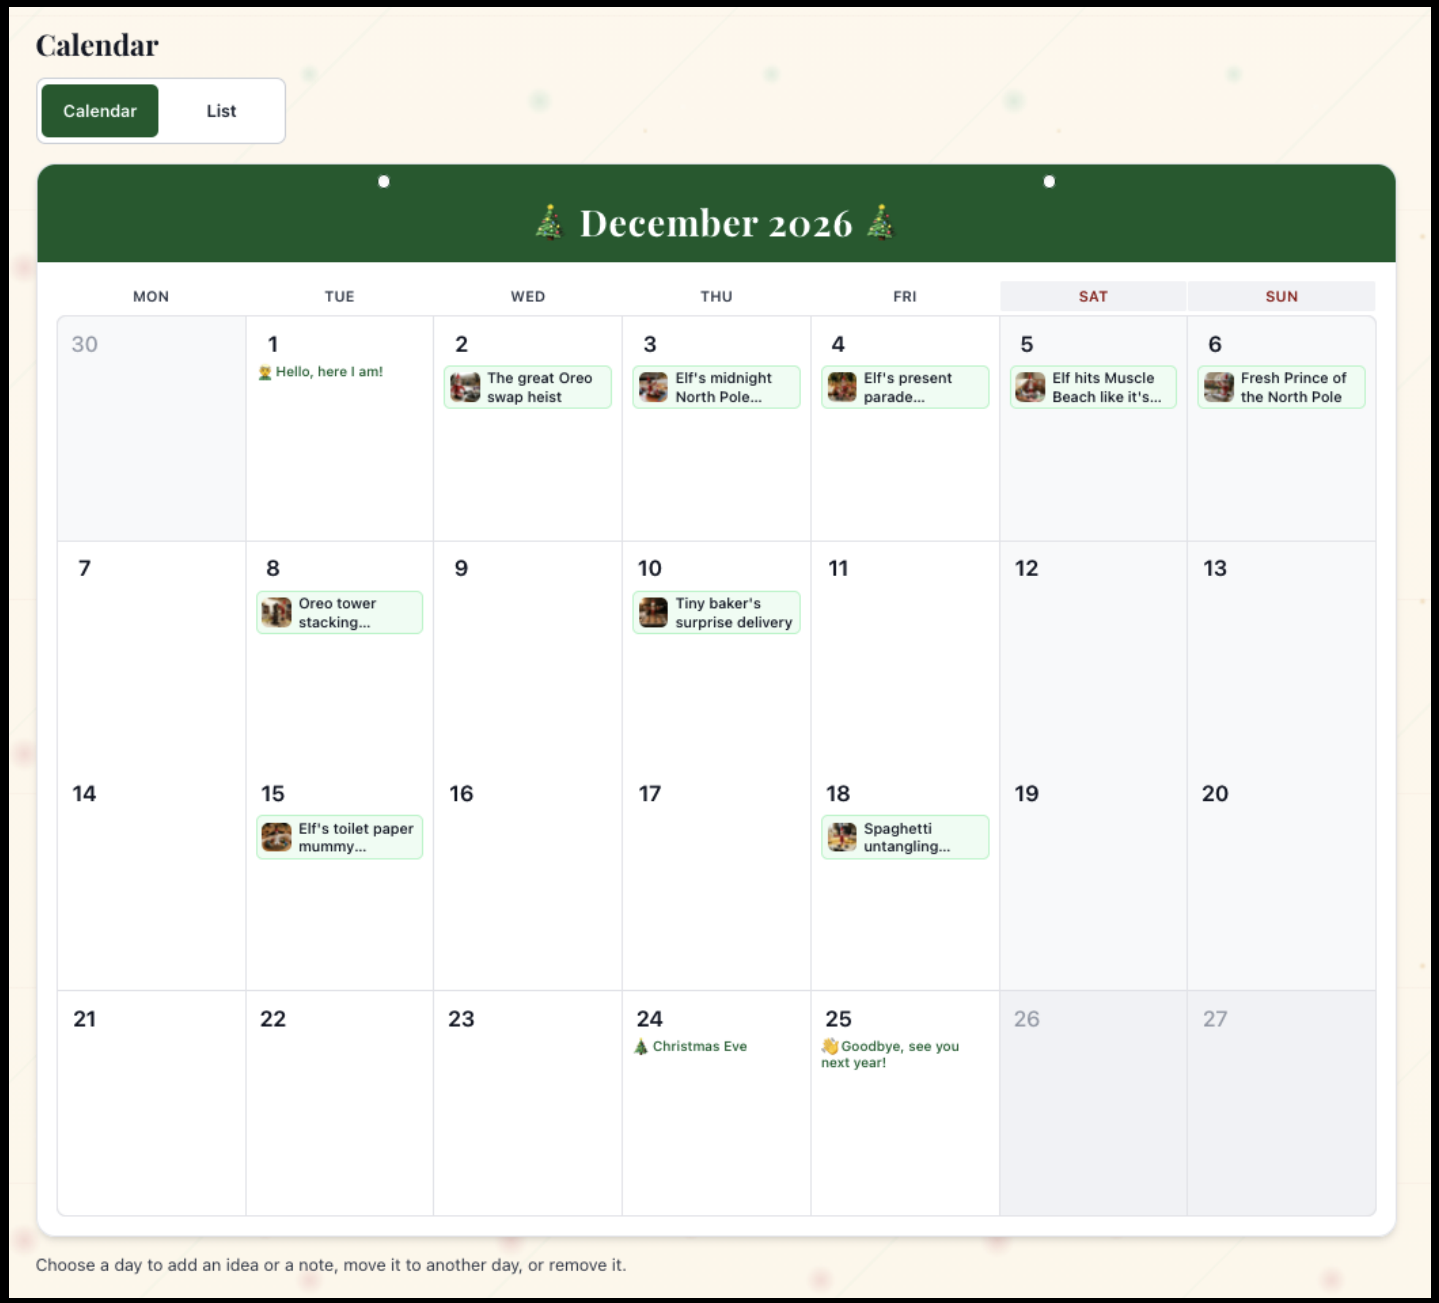

1. Separate the Oreo cookies into two halves and place them on a plate in an assembly line formation.
2. Squeeze a small amount of toothpaste onto one half of each Oreo, then use the butter knife to spread it evenly.
3. Place the other half of the Oreo on top to re-assemble the cookie, pressing gently to secure the toothpaste filling inside.
4. Drape the rubber glove over your hand as if the elf has been working.
5. Position the elf beside the plate of reassembled Oreos with the butter knife and toothpaste tube nearby, as if mid-task.

Tips & variations

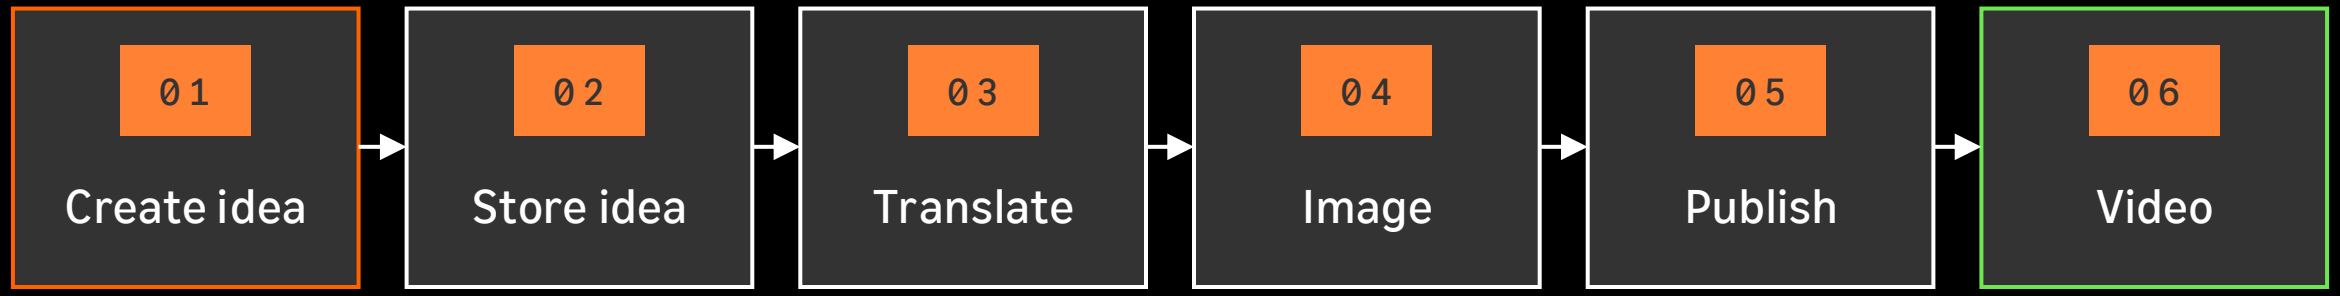

- Use only a tiny amount of toothpaste to avoid making a mess — just enough to be noticeable but not sticky.
- For a mess-free twist, use a small spoon instead of a knife to apply the toothpaste, making cleanup easier for little hands.
- Variations can include using different white gel-like substances like mayonnaise or cream cheese for a different surprise.
